Hugh uses a slide show to explore the history of water drop photography from dripping taps to today's sophisticated micro computer controlled set ups. Although it is a niche subject, it covers lots of useful ground regarding macro photography, stop motion flash photography and image editing. There is something for everyone, from beginner to experienced members - everyone always goes having learned something. Hugh talks for maybe 40 minutes and then has a break for half an hour to allow people to get refreshments and see a couple of live demonstrations. The first captures a two drop collision in a glass and the second a shoot from below mid air collision of a forced jet and a falling drop. In both cases, an image is captured in real time but , thanks to flash and persistent vision, the audience can see the collision with the naked eye. http://www.hugh.letheren.org/
